Internet Curriculum Provides Starting Point for Teachers / Support Materials Available for Easy Classroom Use

Tucson, Arizona – July 12, 2004 -- Let's face it. Sitting down on a Friday afternoon to plan an academically sound, student – friendly regimen for the next week can be daunting. Factor in the low availability of multicultural materials necessary for today's classroom, and the task is almost insurmountable.

Enter, TheLessonMachine.Com, a comprehensive curriculum site available by member subscription. "Teachers love our literature units," says site founder Myscha Theriault. "All they need to do is select a book title. We take care of the rest. Holistic writing, vocabulary and comprehension activities, combined with puzzles, quizzes and more traditional assessment materials takes a huge load off today's overworked classroom professionals. On top of that, we have loads of supplemental resources, as well as an economical and detailed geography program."

Teachers, Homeschoolers, parents and media specialists interested in the site's services should go to <http://www.thelessonmachine.com> today. Free samples are available for download.
