New Teacher Site Celebrates Cultural Diversity / Folklore Is Common Link

Tucson, Arizona – August 2, 2004 -- Folklore is a common link among all peoples of the world. TheLessonMachine.Com, a subscription website for teachers, libraries, homeschoolers and parents uses this common link as the backbone for a comprehensive new product line.

“Literature is such a magical way to celebrate the world mosaic,” says project founder Myscha Theriault. “We’ve taken it to the next level by providing the detailed lesson plans and support materials necessary for successful classroom use.” All world regions are represented at TheLessonMachine.Com. In addition to folklore and heritage activities, the site provides economical geography lessons and academic units on animals from various cultural regions. For example, the modules dealing with camels and falcons were developed to further extend the study of Arabian heritage while integrating science concepts. The llamas module was developed as an extension of the section on South American folklore.

Teachers, homeschoolers, parents and librarians interested in finding out more should go to <http://www.thelessonmachine.com>. Free samples are also available.
